Queenstown, May 9, 5.30 a. m.—Twenty-three miles from this port as the crew fled an irregular smear of steam on a calm sea marked the grave of the Cunard liner Lusitania, first transatlantic liner sunk by a German submarine. Forty-nine of 1,500 passengers perished with her in improvised morgues in old buildings bordering Queenstown harbor. They either were picked up dead or succumbed after landings.

Additional Deaths Expected. The 648 survivors here are quartered in hotels, residences and a convalescent home. Some 200 bodies are expected to be recovered, and nearly all are too dazed to understand fully what has happened.

Stories of Survivors Disagree. The survivors do not agree as to whether the submarine fired on two torpedoes. A few say they saw the periscope, though many attest to seeing the submarine as a projectile came towards the vessel. The only points in which all concur is that the torpedo struck the vessel's starboard side, causing her to list almost immediately to the starboard. In this careening fashion she plowed forward some distance, smashing the lifeboats' davits as she did so, and making the launching of boats well nigh impossible until headway had ceased.

Difficulty in Launching Lifeboats. How far the Lusitania struggled forward after being struck and how long it was before she disappeared beneath the waves likewise are points upon which few passengers agree, estimates of the time she remained afloat ranging from eight to twenty minutes. The list, the list to starboard, the elevated lifeboats on the port side so as to render them useless and it is said only two on the starboard side were launched. The first of these, according to the custom of the sea, was filled with women and children. It struck the water unevenly, capsizing, and throwing its sixty occupants into the sea. The Lusitania, even as she was making considerable headway, and these women and little children were swept to death in spite of the attempts of two stokers to rescue them. These stokers, according to the passengers, were drowned.

Lifeboats Broke Afloat. After that survivors were launched successfully, but the steamer's list grew more perilous, the decks slanting to such an angle that it was imperative for all to cling to the sides. Many by this time had donned lifebelts and jumped. Several lifeboats broke afloat, uncoupled and drifted. A crowd of oars, chairs, debris and human bodies.

Crew Behaved Well. Two stokers, seeing a drifting boat, dived overboard, recovered it and pulled it nearly two miles from the ship. The Lusitania's crew meanwhile adhered to the letter of the instructions which had been given them and the discipline was rigid, although one or two subordinate officers are said to have told a group of passengers who had climbed into the water that there was no immediate danger and advised them to remain on deck a while longer. Whether this was due to the fact that these subordinates lost their heads or to their conviction that the ships' decks would be safer, is not known.

Survivors Are Dazed. All day yesterday in hotel corridors, halls and reception rooms survivors sat listlessly, still too dazed to discuss what had occurred. They were dressed in a variety of garments. Some were crying softly. In front of the small Cunard offices a crowd of people, mostly women, were gathered, clamoring for news of father, mother, brother or sister.

Dead in Four Morgues. In four morgues lay the dead, women in some cases side by side with children, grouped like toys. The body of Charles Frohman, his features placid, lay face upward in a bare room in an old building overlooking a hundred yards from the water's edge. Around him were ranged fifty bodies of both sexes, over which attendants were busy, sorting and ticketing their belongings.

Battery of Submarines. Those men best fitted to chronicle the last moments of the Lusitania, Elbert Hubbard, Justus Miles Forman, Charles Frohman, Albert Gwynne Vandenberg and others—apparently all were to their graves with her. Her speed at the time she was struck was variously estimated from ten to twenty knots. When forced, the liner could

An Additional Survivor

London, May 9, 8.30 p. m.—An additional survivor of the Lusitania disaster made known this evening in Arthur Dixon, of New York, a second class passenger.

enough to develop a heroine in the person of Miss Kathleen, a twenty-year-old, who was returning from New York, where she had been visiting relatives. With smiling words and reassurance she aided attendants in filling a boat with women and children. When all were in she climbed aboard the lifeboat and as the boat was being lowered she was seen to wave her hand to her sister, who was in another lifeboat.

One sailor fainted at his oar as the result of a hard race to escape swamping. The girl took his place and rowed until the boat was out of danger. None among the survivors bears as little sign of her terrible experience as Miss Kathleen, who is almost most of her time comforting and assisting her sisters in misfortune.

THIRTY DRAGGING OF LIFEBOATS was explained by a number of passengers and members of the crew by the statement that the second torpedo struck the Lusitania between the engines. The Lusitania had been sent full speed ahead when the first torpedo struck her, and it was impossible to stop her headway by reversing the engines when the necessity for lowering the boats was realized.

WAS IN A LIFEBOAT WHICH CAPSIZED.

A Youthful New Yorker Tells of the Events Following Explosion.

Queenstown, May 9.—G. D. Lane, a youthful but cool-headed second class passenger, who was returning from New York, was in a lifeboat which capsized by the davits as the Lusitania heeled.

"I was on the 'B' deck," he said, "when I saw the wake of the torpedo. I rushed to get a life belt, but before I could do so the ship was on her side. I was in the water for some time, but I was rescued by the crew of the lifeboat. I was then taken to the hospital and am now recovering from my wounds."

Nothing more was added today to the two significant sentences of this utterance—that the president was considering very seriously but very cautiously the right course of action to pursue and that "he knows the people of the country and expects him to act with deliberation as well as with firmness."

Awaiting Official Reports.

Until all the official reports are received from the president, the president is expected to wait. The president is expected to wait. The president is expected to wait.

When the president returned to his desk tonight he found scores of telegrams from all parts of the country. Many urged the adoption of severe measures. Several, among them a few from workmen's organizations, urged a declaration of war as the surest preventive of further affronts to American dignity. Others suggested a declaration of war as the surest preventive of further affronts to American dignity.

American Action is Undetermined

PHASES OF AFFAIR.

IS DEEPLY DISTRESSED

Until All Official Reports Are Received from Ambassadors It Is Not Expected Any Action Will Be Taken.

Washington, May 9.—What action the United States government will take in the case of the sinking of the British liner Lusitania, with a loss of more than a hundred American lives, is tonight an undetermined question. President Wilson during the last 24 hours has been studying every aspect of the case from its legal and humanitarian aspects. This he feels deeply distressed over the incident and realizes the people of the United States expect of him a dignified and dignified fashion their indignation over it was indicated by the statement issued from the White House last night.

Considers Course of Action.

Nothing more was added today to the two significant sentences of this utterance—that the president was considering very seriously but very cautiously the right course of action to pursue and that "he knows the people of the country and expects him to act with deliberation as well as with firmness."
